DANNY SCHWARZ

A MAN OF METROPOLIS EXCLUSIVE

Danny Schwarz was born in South London, having grown up in a rough part of London, fighting was a daily occurrence for Danny and he learned early on he needed to learn how to defend himself.

Following college he spent some years doing up and down the country and working part-time jobs, where he got the opportunity to model and quickly found himself moving to New York where he worked very well reaching number 4 in the world on the Forbes list and models.com. Danny Schwarz shot campaigns for Amari, C&G, Bottega Veneta, Calvin Klein, Tommy Hilgore to name a few. A few magazine covers and covered shows later he is still going strong in the industry. We sat down with the model, actor, athlete and DJ to talk more about his career.

Tell us what got you into sport/boxing and briefly describe a week in the life of your fitness/ workout schedule.

Boxing came into my life at an early age. I grew up in a rough part of South London from a broken, dysfunctional home. Fighting, whether I liked it or not became a regular part of life for me. Not being one to back down, I got beat up, a lot! Not only that, I was mugged at knife point 7 or 8 times, had a glass bottle smashed over my head and just received countless beatings. I lost what little confidence I did have and felt very isolated and alone during those years. I joined a local boxing club which helped to slowly rebuild my confidence. After some time I found myself walking around with my head held high. Just knowing I had boxing in my
